Together in Brotherhood

Once I saw the first light of day seeking to light the whole world with its small but radiant glow; as I watched this,
 the key to the universe was mine. for suddenly I saw the world as it really is — a dawning, a dawning of new life.
 for in this world each day is a new beginning, a new time to grow and learn, a time to search in the flowering dust of yesterday to find an understanding of our time

 our world
 our life
 and our brother.

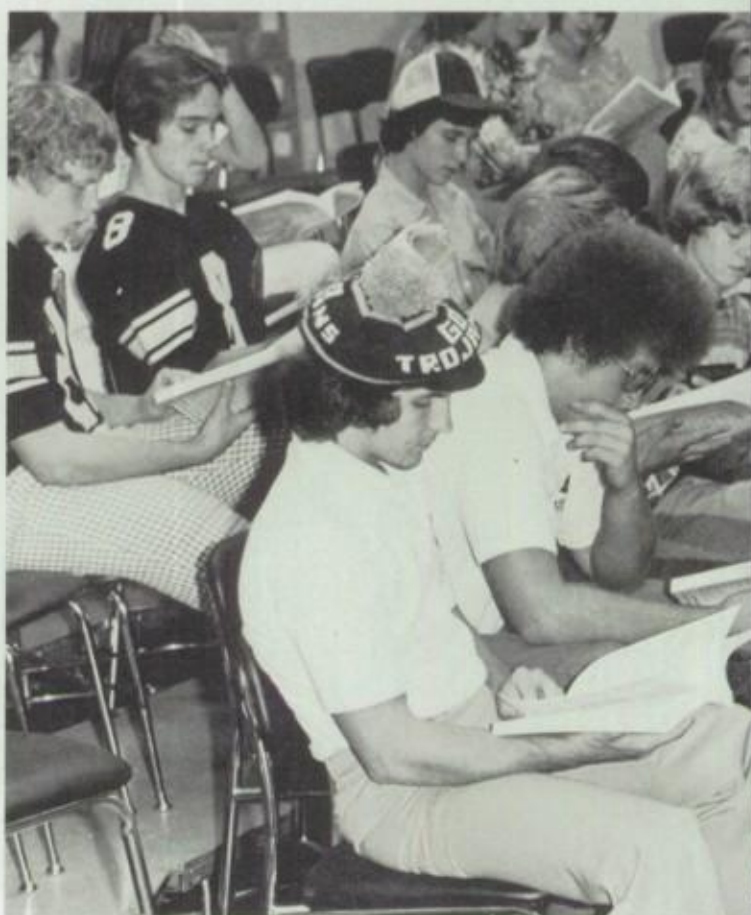

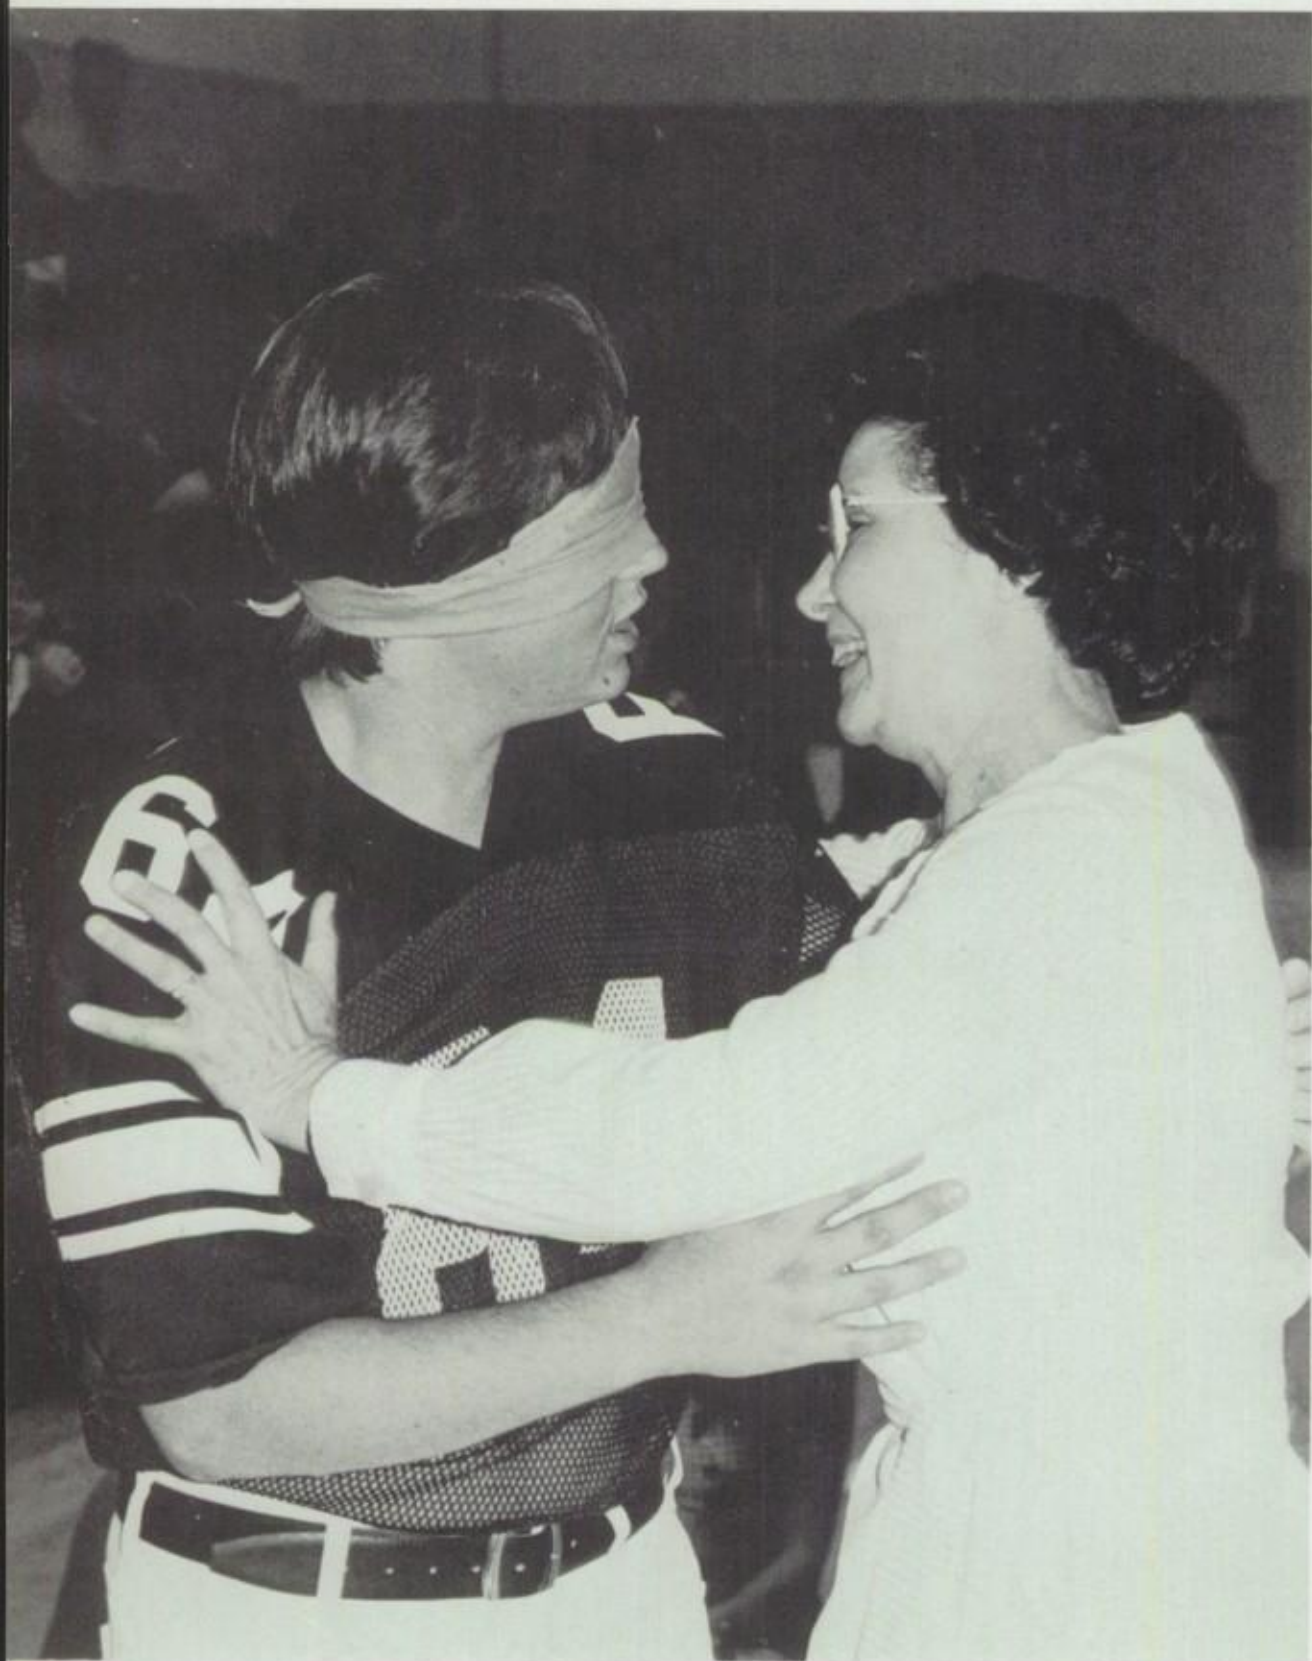

for in this world
some men fight for unity, but all men fight for identity, and only through the knowledge of ourselves can we understand others; can we only see true brotherhood through the eyes of the blind?

like them,
we must learn to reach out with our love
to touch the hearts of others, so their love might touch us, and we can learn the meaning of brotherhood,
together.

then together,
 in brotherhood,
 peace can be found;
 for if I dream of peace
 it's impossible,
 but if we dream of peace it's possible.
 together we must find the elusive light that can unite the world.
 at times it might deceive us,
 and run from us,
 but we must reach out and grasp it,
 hold on to it.
 only then can mankind unite . . .

Mechanic On Duty

with the fall of day golden shafts of light sink into the sea of time, where at moments
peace, love and brotherhood have been locked forever in a fragment of the ages, where the roar was so swift, yet so ominously silent.

but today
we live in a world that has given too many questions and not enough answers, a world where man's quest for knowledge has left us troubled and confused, so we search,
with every waking moment of our lives.

but now, day is done with every sunset comes a star of hope, to lead us to the new dawn ahead.
